

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples are the First Nations of Australia.

We have lived here for over 60,000 years.

Our connection to the land and ancestors is sacred and never ended.

Today, we face unfair treatment.

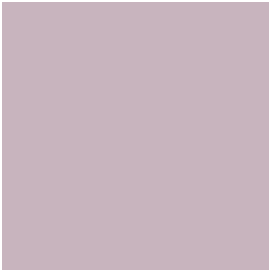

Our people are imprisoned more than any other group.

Our children are taken from families too often.

Our youth are locked up instead of supported.

These problems show Australia's systems are broken.

We want change.

We ask for a First Nations Voice in the Constitution to advise on laws affecting us.

We also want a Makarrata Commission to make agreements and share the true history of our people.

Makarrata means ?coming together after a struggle.

? In 1967, we were counted as part of Australia.

Now, we ask to be heard.

We invite all Australians to join us in building a fair future where our children thrive.

Together, we can create justice and respect.
